

Professor Quentin-Baxter

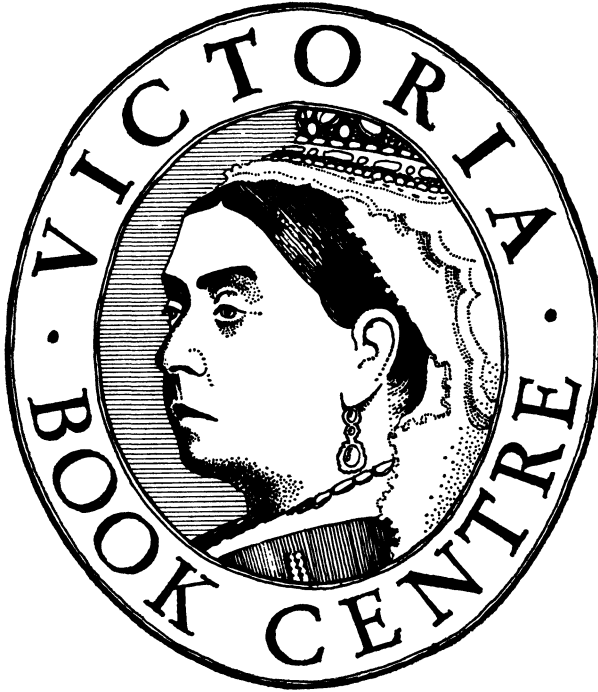

It was with great sadness that the law students of Victoria University of Wellington learned of the death of Professor Quentin-Baxter. He was a lecturer who commanded the especial respect of attentive audiences by his enthusiasm for the subjects which he taught. Students were greatly inspired by this enthusiasm and by the sharing of a long experience in international and constitutional law matters. Professor Quentin-Baxter's continuing involvement with the International Law Commission meant that he brought, along with an awesome depth of vision, fresh perspectives to the teaching of international law. In the field of constitutional law he again had the knowledge and ability to put constitutional theory into a readily comprehensible and practical context.

Though Professor Quentin-Baxter had many matters pressing for his attention, he always made the time to talk with his students. He continually showed an interest in them individually and, with his infectious laughter, shared many a joke with them.

Over the last sixteen years many hundreds of law students in Wellington have had the good fortune to have been taught by Professor Quentin-Baxter. We are particularly grateful to have had that opportunity.
