

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Sally Bullen is a law student at Victoria University. She has incorporated feminist analysis in many areas of her university study, including her Masters paper in Environmental Law.

Mai Chen lectures in law at Victoria University. In 1988 she received a Harvard Human Rights Fellowship to work on discrimination issues in the International Labour Office at Geneva. She writes in the areas of public law and discrimination law.

Virginia Grainer lectures in law at Victoria University. In the past she has worked full-time as a parent, tea lady, and manager of a Department of Social Welfare children's home. She has practised law as a solicitor and in the Office of the Ombudsman. She is currently researching in succession law.

Hon Judge C Henwood graduated from the Law School at Victoria University in 1969. She practised law until 1985, when she was appointed to the Bench. She was the first woman judge in Wellington.

Anne Holden graduated from the Law School at Victoria University in 1990. An author of six novels, she has been a school teacher and a law lecturer. She is currently a member of the Indecent Publications Tribunal.

Jane Kelsey lectures in law at Auckland University. She graduated from Victoria in 1976. Her contribution to this volume is drawn from research for her 1993 book, Rolling Back the State: the Privatisation of Power in Aotearoa/New Zealand. Jane is actively involved in international human rights, anti-racism and social justice issues.

Joy Liddicoat completed her law degree at Victoria in 1986. She practised law in Wellington until 1989, when she began work as a lawyer for a government department. Joy lives on 26 acres of land north of Wellington with her partner, two dogs, and a cat.

Elisabeth McDonald lectures in law at Victoria University. A mother of two children, she has worked in the New Zealand film industry and in private legal practice. Drawing on feminist theory, she writes in the area of criminal law.

Joanne Morris OBE, lectured in law at Victoria for six years, until 1990. Currently a member of the Waitangi Tribunal and the Broadcasting Standards Authority, she has written in the areas of pornography law and civil obligations.

Janet November completed an LLM at Victoria in 1992. In the past she has worked as a nursery school supervisor, lecturer, solicitor, and has written children's stories. Janet has been Judges' Research Counsel for the District Court in Wellington since 1987.

Wendy Parker lectures in law at Massey University. She has worked as a Judges' Clerk and is currently completing her LLM at Victoria University. She writes in the areas of torts and alternative dispute resolution, and is actively involved in women's community health.

Carmel Rogers graduated in law from Victoria in 1992. She has worked in the union movement and as Executive Director of the New Zealand Shipping Federation. As a negotiator, she had a reputation for being a relentless pragmatist with no dedication to orthodoxy or sacred cows. Carmel is now working as a barrister sole.

Teresa Shreves lectures in law at Victoria University. She received her law degree in the United States and in 1983 moved to New Zealand. She has worked as a lawyer both in the public sector and in private practice with a Wellington law firm.

Shirley Smith was the first editor of the Victoria University of Wellington Law Review. For 30 years, until 1991, she practised law on her own account in Wellington, having previously worked as a lecturer (both in classics and law) and as a vocational guidance officer.

Margaret A McGregor Vennell graduated from Victoria in 1959 and worked in private practice until 1960. She has held key government positions, including Secretary of the Law Reform Commission. From 1967 she has lectured in law at the University of Auckland and is now an Associate Professor. Margaret has been a member of the Board of Directors of the Accident Compensation Corporation and is currently a member of the Ethics Committee of the Health Research Council of New Zealand.