

Inspector-General of Defence Bill

Legislative Statement – First Reading

Presented to the House of Representatives under Standing Order 272

1. The Inspector-General of Defence Bill (the Bill) is a Government Bill that would establish the offices of the Inspector-General of Defence (the IGD) and Deputy Inspector-General of Defence.
2. Its purpose is to help the Minister of Defence to oversee the activities of the New Zealand Defence Force (NZDF) and account accurately to the House of Representatives for the NZDF's activities, and assure the public that there is independent scrutiny of those activities, including in relation to New Zealand's obligations under international law.

Background

This Bill has been developed in direct response to a recommendation of the Government Inquiry into Operation Burnham and related matters

3. The Inquiry into Operation Burnham and related matters (the Inquiry) was established in 2018 to examine allegations of wrongdoing by the NZDF during a series of operations conducted in Afghanistan in 2010 and 2011. It found that there were significant shortcomings in the way in which the NZDF dealt with and reported on allegations of civilian casualties. Specifically, NZDF personnel failed to provide full and accurate information to Ministers, and to adequately scrutinise or respond to the information available to them.
4. To help address these issues, the Inquiry recommended establishing an oversight body to independently look at NZDF activities.

The Bill establishes an independent IGD

5. The Bill's objective is to enhance independent scrutiny of, and regenerate public confidence in, the NZDF. It would achieve this by:
  - 5.1. establishing the IGD as an independent statutory officer external to the NZDF, independent of Government policy and Ministerial decision-making (clause 7(1));
  - 5.2. enabling the House of Representatives to recommend who should be appointed as the IGD (clause 7(2));
  - 5.3. ensuring that the IGD has control of its own work plan and is able to perform functions on its own initiative (clause 14 and 53); and
  - 5.4. enabling the IGD to make recommendations to the NZDF, and requiring these to be reported publicly (clauses 20 and 21).

Key features of the Bill

The Bill establishes the IGD's functions, duties, and the scope of its oversight

6. The Bill establishes two core functions for the IGD (clause 8(1)):
  - 6.1. to investigate incidents that have occurred during NZDF activities; and
  - 6.2. to assess and identify potential improvements or additions to policies and procedures governing NZDF activities.

7. The Bill permits the IGD to exercise these functions on its own initiative or by request from the Minister, Chief of Defence Force, or Secretary of Defence. On its own, it can look into defined operational activities that have the most potential to cause harm, undermine public confidence, and carry reputational risks to New Zealand (clause 8(2)).
8. To guide the IGD's oversight and support its decision making about what to investigate and when, the Bill requires the IGD to exercise its functions impartially, fairly, independently, and in the public interest, to have regard to the military context in which the NZDF operates (clause 9), and to avoid unnecessary duplication of scrutiny of the NZDF (clause 10).

Powers to gather information

9. The Bill gives the IGD powers to ensure effective oversight. These align with public inquiries and other oversight bodies, such as the Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security. At any time the IGD may directly access NZDF records (clause 24(1)) and request NZDF information and any other reasonable assistance (clause 25).
10. Additional powers are available during an investigation, to ensure that the IGD is able to access all the information it needs to understand the context and cause of an incident. These include powers to examine people under oath (clause 28) and enter NZDF premises, such as defence areas or assets like ships (clause 31).

Protections for people and information

11. To encourage open honest participation in the IGD's proceedings, the Bill contains a number of protections for people that the IGD would engage with. In particular, the Bill protects whistleblowers by confirming that the NZDF cannot penalise or disadvantage any person (including NZDF personnel) who co-operates with the IGD (clause 44).
12. In the course of performing its functions, the IGD would handle classified information. To protect this information and national security interests, the Bill imposes a number of safeguards including:
  - 12.1. security clearance requirements for the IGD, Deputy IGD, staff and advisors (clauses 7, 11, 48, 49 and 51);
  - 12.2. an offence for wilfully failing to comply with a duty of confidentiality (clauses 36 and 46).

The Bill makes it an offence to obstruct or lie to the IGD

13. The Bill creates a number of offences to encourage good faith interactions with the IGD. These are set out in Part 5 of the Bill and include wilfully obstructing or misinforming the IGD. A person who commits one of these offences can be fined up to $10,000 (clause 45), in line with penalties for similar offences for other oversight bodies.

The IGD determines what to report on and the NZDF is obliged to respond

14. The Bill requires the IGD to make a report when it completes an investigation or assessment (clause 19). The IGD is responsible for determining the content of the report; the Bill only requires that it include findings and any recommendations. Once prepared, the IGD must share its report with the Minister of Defence, Secretary and Chief of Defence Force (CDF), and to the extent possible with regard to sensitive information, make its findings publicly available (clause 21).
15. The Bill obliges the CDF to respond to the IGD's recommendations, by notifying the Minister of Defence, the IGD, and the Secretary of any actions it proposes to take to implement the recommendations. If it does not propose to implement them, the NZDF must explain its reasoning (clause 22).