Rainfall

- Normal (50 years): 3.5 inches
- Actual: 2.9 inches

Temperature

- Mean earth temperature at 1 ft., 50.4 °C; at 3 ft., 48.0 °C.
- Sunlight, 36 per cent. of the possible.
- Mean dewpoint at 9 a.m., 44.8 °C; mean vapour pressure, 0.296 in.

Gusts

- Maximum: 99.4 m.p.h.
- Minimum: 15.0 m.p.h.

Wind

- Calm: 26.0 days
- Light: 29.0 days
- Moderate: 10.0 days
- Strong: 5.0 days

Summary

- Mean temperature 50.4 °C; mean rainfall 2.9 inches.
- Mean temperature at 3 ft. 48.0 °C; mean rainfall 2.9 inches.
- Mean humidity 61.2 per cent.

Notes

- During May, as in the months preceding, temperatures were cold. Skies were dull and rain fell frequently in most parts, but there was a fortunate lack of continued strong winds. Although there were several gales, the ground is now well soaked and, while some pasture growth has been checked, animals are in a healthy condition. Some stock were lost in the Otago floods.

General Notes

- Rainfall: In spite of the large number of rain days, the total fall was somewhat below normal in several regions—viz., the Waikato, King-country, North Taranaki, and Poverty Bay, as well as in Nelson and Westland provinces. Rainfall was in excess in most other districts, the percentage excesses being greatest in Canterbury and Otago, where many stations had over double the normal amount, chiefly as the result of the continuing rains from the 4th to the 8th, when many floods occurred. Thunderstorms were numerous, some being accompanied by sharp hail-showers.

Temperature

- The milder spells were brief and the colder more prolonged. Mean temperatures from Canterbury northwards were about 2 °F below normal, while in southern Taranaki the precipitation rate was intense. The main depression moved in the direction of Chatham Islands, but on the 8th a secondary disturbance developed into a cyclone which travelled eastwards from Poverty Bay. Meanwhile southern winds continued to prevail and rain fell steadily in Canterbury, Otago, and Southland, where rivers were running high with considerable damage from flooding, and resultant dislocation of traffic. The floods were severest in the Taieri Valley.

Summarize

- A complex depression crossing the country on the 26th resulted in another unsettled spell when snow fell on the ranges, strong southerly gales being experienced on the east coast. From the 28th onward the arrival of a new anticyclone produced better weather but nights were very frosty in both islands. On the last day of May low pressure was falling in the south and scattered rains occurred in the west and in the far north and south. Elsewhere it was fair and rather milder.
