Meteorological Observations at Kelburn, Wellington, for the Month of July, 1941. Observations taken at 9 a.m.

Altitude of Observatory, 415 ft.

Mean earth temperature at 1 ft., 46·2°; and at 3 ft., 48·2°. Number of rain days, 17. Total rainfall, 36 per cent. above normal. Sunshiné, 36 per cent. of the possible. There were seven days without any bright sunshine being recorded. Mean dew-point at 9 a.m., 42·5°; mean vapour pressure, 8·9 mb.

Note.—The month was remarkable for the number of mild days. Five frosts were registered at Kelburn, that of the 17th being very white. Thunder was heard on the morning of the 6th. Two fog situations were experienced, that of the 24th persisting all day.

Direction of Wind.

General Notes.—The weather in July was very favourable, with an absence of stormy conditions frequently associated with this month. As there was little wind, series of sharp frosts were experienced in all parts of the country. Early heifers calves are seen in increasing numbers and these, as well as all classes of stock, are faring well, with adequate fodder reserves available for the rest of the winter. Except in a few places where the ground has been frozen, cultivation in preparation for spring sowings has progressed satisfactorily, while autumn-sown crops are making good growth.

Rainfall over most of the country was below average. The delinquencies were most prominent on the Canterbury Plains, about Banks Peninsula, and in the Hawke's Bay region, and in these localities the falls were generally one-third to one-half the normal. Several restricted areas received moderate excesses, the chief of these being the Bay of Plenty district and small areas centred near Auckland, Hawera, Napier, Wellington, and Nelson.

Temperature.—Mean temperatures were very close to normal values, there being little significance in the trend of the departures. Several mild days compensated for frequent frosty nights. Practically no snow reached lower levels, and a good deal of the snow-covering has melted from the ranges.

Sunshine figures were also little different from normal, but showed a tendency for slight surpluses, the Auckland value, however, being appreciably above average.

Weather Sequence.—At first conditions were fine generally, but as an anticyclone moved eastward from New Zealand rain developed on the 3rd in northern and western districts and became more widespread, reaching districts east of the ranges between the 5th and 7th. At this time the heaviest rain fell in Auckland and Westland. From the 8th to the 10th New Zealand was covered by an extensive but shallow low-pressure system, which caused little wind but considerable fog and drizzle.

On the 9th some heavy rain fell in the Central Provinces. This rain accompanied the wind change persisted intermittently between Kaikoura and East Cape, but otherwise an improvement quickly followed. On the 10th the low-pressure system which was then to the east formed a deep centre near Chatham Islands and kept the southerlies fresh in many places.
