Notes on the Weather for June, 1944

General.—June was cold and often frosty. There was a marked prevalence of south-westerly weather in which cool winds fluctuated between west and south-west giving mixed weather, showers being followed, especially in eastern districts, by bright clear periods. Stock are wintering unusually well and are still benefiting from the good autumn growth. Fine spells have enabled further wheat to be sown in Canterbury.

Rainfall.—Precipitation was mostly of a showery nature. The areas receiving excessive and deficient totals were about equal. In the North Island, moderate excesses occurred towards the west coast from Foxton northwards, but elsewhere rainfall was below average, being very light east of the main ranges and most noticeably so near Castlegregory. In the South Island, totals south of Westport and Ashburton were above normal, the largest percentage departures occurring between the Wairakei River and Stewart Island. Over most of Macleans falls were only about half the normal.

Temperature.—Except in isolated eastern districts, temperatures were below normal. Outside those districts fully exposed to the south-west, frosts were numerous and at times hard. On several occasions the ranges of both Islands as well as some low levels in the South Island experienced falls of snow. Hay showers were fairly frequent.

Sunshine.—In Taranaki, Wellington, and Southland sunshine totals were somewhat below average, but elsewhere they were above. Most places between Christchurch and Gisborne had the equivalent of at least an hour’s extra sunshine per day. Gisborne, which enjoyed 184-hour record, had a record value.

Weather Sequence.—On the 1st a deep depression moving eastward from East Cape was giving rain between Masterton and Opotiki. A series of south-westerly depressions began to pass in the south, the first members weakening rapidly after reaching Danedine. Conditions were windy and showery at times in western and southern districts, but elsewhere showers were brief. The depression on the 6th remained more vigorous and, as a centre moved east of the South Island towards Chatham Islands, south-westerlies became strong and most districts had passing wintry showers, with snow in some of the southern towns. A wedge from the Australian high was over New Zealand on the 9th and 10th when, except at first in the Auckland Province, conditions were settled with widespread sharp frosts.

The second trough followed closely but weakened, and a wedge from the anticyclone centred over Victoria covered the South Island on the 28th. A depression to the north gave some rain in the Auckland Province, but the weather had become very light east of the main ranges and most noticeably so near Castlegregory. In the South Island, totals south of Westport and Ashburton were above normal, the largest percentage departures occurring between the Wairakei River and Stewart Island. Over most of Macleans falls were only about half the normal. Hail showers were fairly frequent.

Another south-westerly series developed, and between the 11th and 13th affected chiefly Westland and Southland. On the 14th an anticyclone began to extend across the northern Tasman to northern New Zealand, so that winds moderated and fine weather predominated. A period of rain fell in western districts of the South Island, and north-westerlies increased to gale force about Cook Strait ahead of a pressure trough which crossed most of New Zealand on the 15th. A depression which developed on this trough moved south-eastward across Westland and Canterbury on the 18th. Except east of the ranges, most districts received appreciable rain. An anticyclone moved past northern New Zealand on the 19th, while a depression passed to the south. Another depression crossed central New Zealand on the 21st and continued to deepen. Strong southerlies advanced and showery periods occurred in most districts, with snow on the ranges and also to low levels in the south. Rain was heavy on the east coast of the South Island, with some flooding south of Dunedin.

The south-westerly type of situation again prevailed, conditions being changeable but with bright periods; showers were most persistent in Southland. A small anticyclone passed in the north on the 25th and a trough advanced in the south, north-westerlies strengthened temporarily in central districts. A second trough followed closely but weakened, and a wedge from the anticyclone centred over Victoria covered the South Island on the 28th. A depression to the north gave some rain, while the south-east sector was below average, being fine almost generally by the morning of the 30th. However, that evening a deep trough reached Southland and made very rapid progress, bringing strong south-westerlies and very wintry showers.
