Notes on the Weather for August, 1945

General.—August was a mild and cloudy month, with excess rain in the majority of districts. There was good grass growth, especially in the North Island. Conditions were very satisfactory for calving and lambing, although in some parts the prevailing wetness caused some slight losses. Also algal blooms, and associated spring scums, were prevalent.

Rainfall.—Rainfall was above average throughout South Auckland, Taranaki, and the Manawatu, as well as in the Province of Nelson, Westland, Marlborough, and Canterbury. It was the percentage excesses being greatest in the latter two. A few North Canterbury stations experienced totals three to four times the normal. This was largely the result of the heavy rains on the 7th and 8th, which gave falling between Ashburton and Cape Campbell, being severest near Kaiapoi. Rivers in the Nelson Province were in flood about the 4th. It was appreciably drier than usual in the Gisborne District, over most of Otago, and in Southland. Smaller deficiencies occurred in North Auckland and Southern Wairarapa.

Temperatures.—Mean temperatures were milder than the normal by about 2°F. This was in contrast to the three preceding months, which were colder than usual throughout the Dominion. Cloudy skies and northerly winds accounted for the reduction in the number of frost experiences.

There was a heavy snowfall in and near the Ashburton County on the 8th, but otherwise little snow occurred at lower levels. Snow, and more distant districts suffered from lack of snow, but Manawatu and the Wairarapa had a mean average.

Weather Sequence.—An intense anticyclone remained east of New Zealand for several days. Northerly winds, which were bringing cloudy weather, gradually strengthened. At first scattered rain occurred chiefly about East Cape and Nelson, but rain increased and spread to western and northern districts on the 4th, when a depression was off south-western New Zealand. The main trough passed over the centre of the country, and although in the south a small anticyclone brought a clearance on the 5th it continued duf elsewhere with rain at times. Falls became heavier as a depression approached Westland from the north. On the 7th a westerly change spreading from the far north was bringing some improvement, while strong winds from the south-east quadrant were giving rain in the south, producing floods in parts of Eastern Marlborough and Canterbury. Snow fell in the higher country. Conditions were gradually improving, although a shallow depression crossing Wellington Province on the 9th and another passing Auckland the next day gave brief rain.

With a weak wedge over the country on the 11th it was temporarily fine. A depression passed over the South Island that night and a weaker wedge over the Auckland Province the following night. Short periods of rain occurred in most districts. Another wedge followed wuth mainly fair but cool weather.

A shallow depression over the middle of the South Island gave a little rain on the 14th, but as the main trough advanced eastward over the Dominion on the 16th, with a centre deepening over Auckland Province, rain became fairly general and southerly winds prevailed. However, it was clearing from the south and became fine over the North Island on the 17th. A depression was then moving past southern New Zealand, causing a deterioration from the south-west. North-westterlies became strong for a period. Negligible rain fell east of the ranges, although a few showers occurred later with the southerly change.

By the 30th a strong anticyclone had covered the country and the weather was settled. This system intensified, and its centre did not move far beyond Chatham Islands until after the 31st. Winds tended from easterly to northerly and freshened at times, and cloud increased slowly, and thunderstorms were frequent over the country.

A cold southerly change, bringing some snow over the North Island and a depression off the west coast, appeared on the 30th. Rain increased in most parts of eastern New Zealand.
