Alternatively, if the proprietor elects to accept an extension equivalent to the period during which he was unable to exercise his normal rights, he will be required to waive his claim to compensation in respect of any use occurring between the 7th December, 1941, and the date of restoration.

in the South Island, but the weather soon cleared in Otago and Southland. Elsewhere it remained unsettled, under the influence of a shallow, almost stationary trough which extended from Westland north-eastwards across the centre of the South Island. A spell of cold, frosty weather began on the 9th and continued for another six days. During this period a large, intense anticyclone moved slowly eastwards across the middle of the Dominion. Easterly winds prevailed in the north, however, and after the 11th showers developed about Gisborne and in exposed parts of Northland and Coromandel.

In the South Island, some rain fell on the 16th during the passage of a cold front and again when a secondary cold front passed some eighteen hours later. A ridge then extended across the Tasman Sea on to southern New Zealand while a shallow depression formed west of the North Island. When the latter moved slowly eastwards across Auckland and the Bay of Plenty widespread rain developed north of Canterbury and Buil. The ridge advanced slowly north-eastwards giving a temporary improvement in the north, but it began to rain heavily in Westland on the 29th with the approach of an unstable frontal system from the west. Two wave depressions formed within this system—the first passed Southland on the afternoon of the 29th, the second travelled rapidly eastwards across the centre of the North Island during the night of the 30th, bringing heavy rain and gales from Canterbury to South Auckland. Rivers in South Canterbury were in high flood on the 22nd, but the weather showed a general improvement during the day.

After the passage of a deep depression far to the south late on the 22nd, a cold front advanced rapidly from the south-west. With rising barometers, the weather then became clear and frosty. By the 25th an intense anticyclone was moving slowly eastwards across New Zealand. At the same time, Northland came under the influence of an extensive depression approaching from the north. Rain spread slowly southwards to eastern districts of the North Island, as the depression pursued a south-easterly course to pass over East Cape on the night of the 26th. On the following day, when a complex disturbance arrived from the west, rain became general with heaviest falls in Canterbury.

At the end of the month this disturbance was centred east of Hawke’s Bay and was moving away slowly eastwards, while a ridge from the west brought improved weather to Southland.
