Nov. 29] THE NEW ZEALAND GAZETTE

For the next few days an anticyclone over the western Tasman Sea made little progress towards New Zealand. Pressures remained low to the south-east, and changeable south-westernly weather predominated. Showers were frequent and heavy in coastal districts with some severe squalls in the east, but inland there were considerable fair intervals. A general improvement took place on the 12th, and the weather remained fair and mild for the next two days while the centre of the anticyclone from the west passed across the North Island.

With barometers falling rapidly on the 13th a series of anticyclones moved off to the east, north-westers prevailed and rain commenced in Westland in the 18th, while another crossed Southland twenty-four hours later. The north-westers rose to gale force in exposed positions, and rain soon spread to other districts in and west of the ranges. The development of a wedge of high pressure far to the south forced the low-pressure belt further northwards and by the 18th substantial rains had fallen over the greater part of the country.

Ridges of high pressure to the north and south brought a temporary improvement to Northland and Southland on the 19th, but elsewhere the weather remained unsettled with intermittent heavy rain. A low-pressure centre, which had been lying off Westland for some days, finally moved over the Cook Strait region on the 22nd giving general rain north of Otago. Apart from a few scattered showers the weather cleared temporarily on the 22nd. On the same day the first of a series of very deep depressions crossed Tasmania and sped rapidly towards southern New Zealand. Although the centres of these depressions kept to the south of the Dominion, the associated cold fronts moved across the country from the west. As a result, strong squally north-westers prevailed from the 24th to 27th accompanied by periods of heavy showers. However, few showers penetrated to the Canterbury and Hawke's Bay coast where the weather was fine and very warm. Thunderstorms were reported over a wide area on the 26th. Notes on the Weather for October 1951

General.—October’s weather was mainly dull and stormy—in sharp contrast to the mild, dry conditions of the preceding month. Though rivers ran high on several occasions, especially about the Auckland and Westland, and parts of Southland.

Though rivers ran high on several occasions, especially about the Auckland and Westland, and parts of Southland.

Temperatures.—Temperatures were fairly uniform throughout the month over much of the country. East of the ranges, however, there was more variation with thermometer readings exceeding 80°, on a few occasions in inland districts of Canterbury and Hawke’s Bay. Monthly mean temperatures were about normal over the South Island, and about 1° above normal over most of the North Island.

Frosts were fewer than usual.
