LATE RETURNS.

Over the Auckland Province where easterly winds had already prevailed, showers developed in most districts on the 13th. Elsewhere there was a brief change to northerlies with the approach of a depression moving southwards through the Tasman. The centre passed west of Southland at mid-day on the 13th, while the associated trough moved slowly eastwards across the Dominion causing brief rain in most districts.

Moderate southerlies and colder temperatures prevailed on the 15th ahead of an anticyclone advancing across the South Tasman Seas. Skies remained rather cloudy and rain continued intermittently over the Auckland Province. Altering course, the anticyclone moved north-eastwards over New Zealand, the centre crossing the Wellington Province early on the 17th. Later that day there was a gradual deterioration from the north and west accompanied by a change to north-westerly winds caused by an extensive and complex disturbance in the western Tasman. A period of unsettled weather followed as the disturbance progressed steadily eastwards across the New Zealand area. Rain was general but falls were not excessive.

Coolsoutherlies advanced northwards on the 21st. Next day the weather cleared with the approach of an anticyclone from the west.

Over the 24th the anticyclone had crossed to the east of the Dominion and rain again developed in the north under the influence of another extensive depression covering the Central and North Tasman Seas. Rain spread southwards as far as Nelson and North Canterbury shortly before the main low-pressure centre moved across the centre of the North Island on the 26th. After a temporary improvement on the 27th, a secondary centre produced further rain over the Auckland and Hawke’s Bay provinces. Meanwhile, a weak ridge had given a spell of fair weather in the south.

Notes on the Weather for April 1952

General.—A mild, dry spell over the first half of the month gave place to unsettled and rather colder weather after the 17th. Temporarily retarded through lack of rain, North Island pastures developed again in Southland and Westland on the morning of the 10th. The cold front which produced this rain became weaker during its passage northwards. It was followed by a rapidly intensifying ridge which moved out to the east of Southland on the 12th.
