Note.— At stations where departures from normal are in parentheses, the temperature record has been maintained for less than ten years, the rainfall record for less than twenty years. Rainfall normals have been revised and now refer to the standard period 1921–1950.

Where observations are not available for the whole period, or where the site of the rain gage has been changed, the normals are partly interpolated.

Notes on the Weather for December 1952

General.—The unsettled weather of the preceding month continued through the first half of December. Conditions then improved greatly in the south and west, and in the final quarter the whole country enjoyed a spell of warm settled weather. In the South Island and Westland the weather was warm, bright, and it was a bad season for lambs. Due to lack of sunshine many farmers were unable to cut hay and converted the grass into silage instead. Blight affected many vegetable crops.

Further south conditions were much more favourable especially in Southland and Otago. Fruitgrowers in Central Otago were expecting a good harvest.

Rainfall.—Rainfall was above average over the North Island, and in Nelson, Marlborough, and Canterbury. Over much of this area the excess was slight, but east of the main North Island ranges and in northern Marlborough there was more than double the average December rainfall. The only areas with a 90–100 per cent deficiency were South-west Otago and central Westland.

There was considerable thunderstorm activity during the month, especially in the first half, and reports of local flooding and hail damage were received from several districts including Otago and Hawke’s Bay.

Temperatures.—Mean temperatures were close to the average in eastern and northern districts of the North Island, but elsewhere were appreciably above average, especially in the south where the departure was 2° r. to 3° r.

Sunshine.—The highest sunshine totals were recorded in Westland—most unusual distribution of sunshine for December. It was also sunnier than usual in Southland and on the east coast south of Timaru. Elsewhere there was a marked deficiency of sunshine especially in Marlborough, Nelson, and Westland, and east of the main North Island ranges. Gisborne’s record low figure was equivalent to three hours a day below average.

Weather Sequence.—At the beginning of the month a depression moved across the North Island and early north-westwards across the South Island and west of Otago, and later to the south. There was a 24-hour ridge over the north-west and west of the South Island and a trough over the north-east, which was centred north-east of Auckland with a strong southerly gale. It passed west of Northland on the 4th. During this period the weather was mild with moderate rain forecast over most of the country and numerous thunderstorms, but only light falls in the south and west. There was a temporary clearance in the South Island during the 4th.

After crossing Northland the depression turned south-eastwards causing heavy rain and squally onshore gales affecting much of the North Island Province. It passed away beyond the Chatham Islands on the 7th. By that time rain had again become general with the arrival of a vigorous depression whose centre moved south-east of South Island during the afternoon of the 7th. Unsettled showery weather continued for the next three days and there was much thunderstorm activity, chiefly in the North Island. A secondary depression crossed the middle districts from the west during the 9th.

An anticyclone gave fine weather on the 11th and 12th. North-west winds then became strong in exposed places ahead of the trough associated with a deep depression which passed close to Southland during the 14th. At that time the trough, accompanied by a broad band of rain, was proceeding eastwards across the North Island.

There was an intense anticyclone which passed over the South Island on the 19th, while easterlies proceeded eastwards across the coast of the North Island. A secondary depression crossed the middle districts from the west during the 21st.

An anticyclone gave fine weather on the 23rd and 24th, with generally north-westerly winds over the North Island on the 25th.
