...very high pressure over the Tasman Sea, giving a south-easterly gale.

...the next two days the passage of a depression far to the south brought light rain to the western and southern coasts of the South Island, but elsewhere fair weather prevailed. On the 10th there was an improvement in Westland and Southland under the influence of an extensive belt of high pressure covering the Tasman Sea and most of New Zealand and extending to the east. However, a deterioration occurred on the 11th as a shallow depression developed near North Cape and moved slowly south-eastward during the next three days. Rain affected most of Auckland Province, with some heavy falls on the 12th and 13th in Northland, where some centres were isolated by floodwaters several feet deep. On the 14th the depression moved away to the east, and the weather cleared in the north. However, the passage of a weak trough caused some further showers from Wellington to East Cape. A large anticyclone moved to the country on the 15th, and districts basked in sunshine for the next three days. However, the weather was unsettled during the next two days, especially in the east of the North Island, and there were further showers in Hawke's Bay and Wellington districts. The last three days of the month were settled, and the weather was generally fine, due to the influence of a ridge of high pressure from a large anticyclone over the Tasman Sea.
