The slow eastward passage of a complex trough from the 3rd to the 16th of May caused unusually stormy weather. On the 15th a very active trough of low pressure became stationary and a complex depression which was to cause several days of unusually stormy and wet weather. The main centre moved southwards over the South Island during the night of 17th and 18th, seriously affecting shipping and causing some minor damage on land. Floods were reported in many parts of Canterbury and the Catlins district of Southland. For Roxburgh with 6.46 in. and Lawrence with 10.59 in. it was the wettest of any month in over forty years of record.

For the first two days of the month an anticyclone was centred over the North Island. Winds turned westerly to south-westerly, with showery weather and snow fell to low levels from Southland to Canterbury and crossed Southland, and on the 24th and 25th it lay well to the south. This anticyclone was then centred over the Tasman Sea. The weather was mainly fair, apart from rain at times on the West Coast. There was a general deterioration with the slow eastward passage of a complex trough from the 3rd to the 5th, and flooding was reported in the Opopotiki district. Pressure remained low to the east, and for the next five days a south-westerly airstream covered the country, bringing frequent showers to many districts from Taranaki southward.
