southern coasts of the South Island. During the following two days the associated trough of low pressure crossed New Zealand with only scattered patches of rain until the Auckland Province was reached. The trough then became stationary, with considerable rain. On the 18th this trough remained stationary, while another trough affected mainly coastal districts of the South Island.

The period from the 19th to the 28th was one of mainly fair or fine weather, apart from unsettled weather with easterly winds in Gisborne, extending at times to Hawke's Bay, Wairarapa, and Northland. Some rain also persisted on the 19th and 20th in Fiordland. During this period an anticyclone over the eastern Tasman Sea intensified and moved south-eastward across New Zealand to pass to the south of the Chatham Islands. Pressures remained low to the north-east.

During the last two days of the month a trough of low pressure crossed the country, followed by a southerly change. Some rain was reported in most districts, but the Auckland Province and inland Canterbury were not affected.
