western districts, and also to Northland. From the 15th to the 17th the depression moved over the South Tasman Sea, with a second centre developing to the east of the South Island. This was another period of general rain, except in eastern districts from Timaru to Gisborne. In Northland the rain was heavy on the 15th, with some flooding. During the passage of an anticyclone over the country from the 18th to the 20th the weather was mainly fine, but a few light showers were reported at first in some areas.

During the 21st and 22nd the passage of a depression across the North Island was accompanied by gales in Cook Strait and fairly general rain. On the following day the weather improved in the south with the passage of a small centre over the North Island. On the 24th and 25th an anticyclone covered the Tasman Sea and south-westerlies prevailed over New Zealand, with showers in southern and western districts of the South Island.

A change occurred on the 26th as the anticyclone moved on to the South Island and a depression off the Queensland coast commenced to move southward. Most districts experienced three days of settled weather, but the easterlies brought light rain to Northland and at times also to Gisborne. By the 29th the depression was over the North Tasman Sea, now moving towards western Southland while, at the same time, yet another very deep depression was centred to the south of Tasmania. For two days north-easterly winds prevailed, with rain except in Southland, Otago, and parts of Canterbury; there were some heavy falls in Northland and the Bay of Plenty. On the last day of the month winds changed to north-westerlies, but the distribution of rainfall remained very similar.
