NOTEs ON THE WEATHER FOR January 1962

General: January was unusually warm. Although barometric pressures remained high, as in the three previous months, rainfall was not particularly low, except in Northland. The dry spell from which central districts had been suffering was broken completely in most areas by heavy rain on the 12th, and thereafter growth was quite satisfactory. However, in parts of Hawke's Bay, northern Matanewa, and Taranaki more rain would have been appreciated.

In parts of Northland it was the second month of inadequate rainfall and conditions were very dry, with a falling-off in dairy production. Parts of Auckland and Waitakaro were also finding conditions rather dry.

Rainfall: Rainfall was from two to four times the average value in central districts from southern Manawatu and southern Wairarapa to Nelson city and the northern end of the Kaitournas. In these areas 7 to 10 in. of rain fell on the 12th and 13th, contributing about a third of the monthly total and causing some flooding in the Greytown (Wairarapa) area.

It was also appreciably wetter than usual over the remainder of the Wellington Province and Taranaki, also in Buller, parts of North Canterbury, and parts of the east coast from Cape Colville to Portland Island.

On the other hand, in western and northern Northland and about Auckland city rainfall was less than half the average value.

Temperatures: Temperatures were above average, in the North Island mainly by 4 degrees, in the South Island mainly by 3 degrees. Some temperatures of over 90 degrees were recorded in Canterbury and Hawke's Bay on the 21st. At Timaru the maximum reached 97 and at Waiuku it reached 91.

Snow was reported on the tops of the ranges in Southland on the 5th and again on the 22nd and 23rd.

Sunshine: Sunshine was above average, except in the east of the North Island and in Otago and Southland. Auckland, New Plymouth, Wellington, Westport, and Lincoln were all favoured with surpluses of at least 30 hours.

By contrast, in Bay of Plenty, Taupo, and Hawke's Bay sunshine was below average by more than 25 hours.

Weather Sequence: On the 1st a small depression from the Tasman Sea crossed the country, and the associated trough of low pressure moved southward. On the 2nd to the 25th rain was reported over almost the whole of the South Island, with some light rain in coastal districts as far north as Haast and Dunedin; and on the next two days a few showers fell in the far north.

During the last six days of the month pressures were low to the north, and over the greater part of the North Island, especially in the east, the weather was persistently unsettled. Gisborne and Bay of Plenty were most affected, while the far north remained dry. In the South Island the weather was more settled. However, some light rain was reported on the 23rd in coastal districts as far north as Haast and Dunedin; and on the following day districts further north received a little rain.

With rising pressures the weather soon improved and from the 23rd to the 25th it was mainly fine as an anticyclone moved across New Zealand. However, some light rain was reported on the 23rd in coastal districts as far north as Greymouth and Christchurch on the 28th and 29th; and on the following day districts further north received a little rain.
