Notes—At stations where departures from normal have an asterisk, the temperature record has been maintained for less than 10 years, the rainfall record for less than 20 years. Rainfall normals have been revised and now refer to the standard period 1921-50. Where observations are not available for the whole period, or where the site of the rain gauge has been changed, the normals are partly interpolated.
depression and trough to the south caused rain in Fiordland, south Westland, and coastal Southland; and by the 5th freshening northerlies were bringing rain again to the West Coast.

The period from the 6th to the 11th was one of unsettled weather over the greater part of the country. A depression from the Tasman Sea passed close to Southland and the associated trough of low pressure moved slowly eastward over New Zealand, with rain spreading northward and eastward. The rain became heavy from the 8th to the 10th over parts of the North Island with the formation of a small depression there. Slips and washouts in the King Country caused serious dislocation of rail traffic. Winds turned to the south, with cooler temperatures and a clearance on the West Coast and in Southland and most of Otago. As the depression moved away on the 11th the weather also improved in northern and western districts of the North Island and in Canterbury. In many parts of the North Island there was no rain for the remaining 20 days of the month.

A spell of settled weather followed from the 12th to the 19th as an anticyclone moved across the country. However, freshening easterlies associated with the passage of a depression to the north during the 15th and 16th caused some showers in Gisborne and Coromandel.

Mainly settled weather persisted over the North Island from the 20th to the end of the month under the influence of anticyclones. In the South Island the weather was rather variable and in western and southern areas frequently unsettled as depressions passed to the south. Some light rain spread to parts of Wellington and Waitomo on the 21st and to North Taranaki and Waitomo on the 23rd and 24th. The 25th was marked by unusually cool temperatures in Southland, with snow well down on the mountains.
