NOTES ON THE WEATHER FOR MARCH 1965

General: March was exceptionally cloudy and wet in much of the country. Pasture growth was vigorous in most areas, and good dairy production was maintained, with stock generally in good condition. However in some areas, especially in Hawke’s Bay, Wellington Province, and Canterbury, lambs were adversely affected by soft feed and lack of sunshine; harvesting and hay country. Pasture growth was vigorous in most areas, and good in the early part of the month.

Australian bush fires caused some spectacular sunsets and sunrises especially in Hawke’s Bay, Wellington Province, and near Christchurch. Dairy production was maintained, with stock generally in good condition.

Wind: A weak ridge of high pressure brought an improvement in the weather through most of the month. Later in the month there were long periods when a mild north to north-easterly airstream prevailed over the country. As the depression from the Tasman moved slowly eastwards it brought further rain to the West Coast. On the 30th and 31st an anticyclone covered the country, with plenty of sunshine.

Rainfall: Rainfall was above average over most of the country, especially in Hawke’s Bay, Wellington Province, and near Christchurch. In some North Island areas the rainfall was over four times the average for the month, and in a few places the falls were the highest on record. Exceptionally heavy falls near the Ruahine Mountains on the 17th–20th caused major floods in the Manawatu and Rangitikei Rivers, and there was some minor flooding and slip damage in Hawke’s Bay, and Wellington Province. Raifalls were below half the average value near Blenheim, and were below average in Southland, North Westland, and Nelson.

Temperatures: Cold southerly and south-westerly winds near the beginning of the month brought a sharp drop in temperature in many places, with snow lying to below 3,000 ft in the ranges of both Islands from Egmont and the Tongariro National Park south. Later in the month there were long periods when a mild northerly airstream prevailed over New Zealand. As the depression from the Tasman moved slowly eastward towards New Zealand rain commenced in the north of the North Island and in the south-west of the South Island, and on the 16th it became widespread, especially in the North Island, where heavy falls were recorded in the next three days, particularly in eastern areas from Bay of Plenty to Wellington and about the Ruahines.

By the 18th the depression near the South Island had moved eastwards and a ridge of high pressure had brought a clearance to much of the South Island, and the rain-bearing airstream, now flowing from the north-east and east, was still bringing rain to North Canterbury and eastern areas of the North Island. Until the 21st there was little change except for a gradual weakening of the depression and easing of the rain. Further rain bearing depressions followed quickly. One was approaching from the Tasman Sea on the 22nd, and in the next three days further rain fell in most of the country. Another moved on to New Zealand from the Tasman on the 26th, giving rain mainly in the North Island, Canterbury, and Westland. Scattered showers fell on the 27th and 28th and some heavier rain fell in the South Island and Wellington Province on the 29th as another low pressure trough moved across the country from the west.

Sunshine: Sunshine was below average in most places, by 40-60 hours in the Wellington area and in Nelson and Canterbury, and by 20-30 hours elsewhere. Wanganui’s sunshine of 104 hours was 89 hours below average and was the lowest recorded in 28 years of observations.

Weather Sequence: During the first five days of March low pressure systems covered New Zealand and the area to the east, giving rain in most districts, heavy in central and eastern areas of the country on the 1st and 2nd. Temperatures were cold with snow on the ranges.

A weak ridge of high pressure brought an improvement in the south and west of the South Island on the 3rd, and a general improvement accompanied another ridge on the 6th. With an anticyclone centred at first over the North Island and later east of New Zealand, the weather remained settled until the 15th except for periods of rain in the west and south of the South Island. These accompanied low pressure troughs which moved on to the South Island from the south Tasman Sea on the 7th, 10th, and 13th.

On the 15th an intense anticyclone was centred near Chatham Is, and a depression in the Tasman Sea. Between them a moist northernly airstream prevailed over New Zealand. As the depression from the Tasman moved slowly eastwards towards New Zealand rain commenced in the north of the North Island and in the south-west of the South Island, and on the 16th it became widespread, especially in the North Island, where heavy falls were recorded in the next three days, particularly in eastern areas from Bay of Plenty to Wellington and about the Ruahines.

By the 18th the depression near the South Island had moved eastwards and a ridge of high pressure had brought a clearance to much of the South Island, and the rain-bearing airstream, now flowing from the north-east and east, was still bringing rain to North Canterbury and eastern areas of the North Island. Until the 21st there was little change except for a gradual weakening of the depression and easing of the rain. Further rain bearing depressions followed quickly. One was approaching from the Tasman Sea on the 22nd, and in the next three days further rain fell in most of the country. Another moved on to New Zealand from the Tasman on the 26th, giving rain mainly in the North Island, Canterbury, and Westland. Scattered showers fell on the 27th and 28th and some heavier rain fell in the South Island and Wellington Province on the 29th as another low pressure trough moved across the country from the west.

On the 30th and 31st an anticyclone covered the country, with mainly fine weather prevailing, but on the 31st a cold front approaching from the west brought further rain to the West Coast.
