As this anticyclone moved slowly eastward over the country from the 5th to the 7th, isolated showers persisted in Northland and Gisborne.

By the 8th the anticyclone was centred on the south-west of the South Island and two depressions were centred to the east and west of Northland respectively. During this and the next three days the second depression moved eastward, with rain in northern districts, also in Gisborne and Hawke’s Bay, and light falls later in eastern districts. During the 12th and 13th another depression from the Central Tasman Sea crossed Northland. Rain persisted in northern districts and spread to some other areas, including parts of the South Island.

A spell of generally fair weather was experienced on the 14th and 15th with a ridge of high pressure over the South Island, except for some deterioration on the West Coast and in Southland late on the 15th with the approach of a trough of low pressure.

The trough crossed the country during the 16th and 17th with fairly general rain, some clearing however mainly to the north of the South Island and the more southerly parts of the country. These rain showers persisted for three more days as a depression formed to the east and remained stationary near the Chathams. Rain affected most eastern districts from Christchurch to East Cape (except for parts of Hawke’s Bay) and also the area about Cook Strait. However, a ridge of high pressure extending from the north brought improved weather on the 21st.

From the 22nd to the 24th a depression from the North Tasman Sea crossed the North Island with widespread rain except on the West Coast. Some very heavy falls were recorded in Marlborough, with flooding. For the Kaikoura coast, there was some more general rain, followed by cold southerlies once again with rain mainly about Cook Strait and in Northland.

The last two days of the month were favoured with improved weather as an anticyclone moved once more across the North Island.
