

passage of an anticyclone from west of Cook Strait across New Zealand to beyond the Chatham Islands but at that stage still affecting this country. The West Coast, parts of Otago and Southland, and some western and central districts of the North Island received light rain on the 12th and 13th during the passage of a weak westerly trough. From the 14th to the 17th a depression was almost stationary north-east of Auckland. In the easterlies considerable rain was reported in Gisborne and Hawke's Bay. By the 17th another depression was also advancing over the South Tasman Sea, causing rain to advance from the west on to most western and northern districts on this and the following day.

On the 19th the depression from the Tasman Sea moved on to New Zealand, and rain covered the country as far south as Hokitika and the Kaikouras. By the 20th this depression was centred near the Chatham Islands, and another depression moved rapidly across the Tasman Sea towards New Zealand, with rain still covering the whole of the North Island and also most of the West Coast. Two days of general rain occurred over nearly the whole country on the 21st and 22nd with the passage of this depression to the south-east and later a change to cold southerly winds over the South Island. There were many reports of thunderstorms and hail over the North Island on the 22nd. During the 23rd the weather cleared over the greater part of the South Island. However, on the following day a depression developed to the east of Gisborne and cold southerlies set in up till about the 26th with fairly general rain, clearing first on the West Coast and in the South Island high country. Snow was reported on parts of the North Island high country, blocking the Desert Road for some time. The clearance of weather continued on the 27th but rain was still reported in Gisborne, Hawke's Bay and Taihape, besides a few showers in Manawatu and on the coast from North Canterbury to Banks Peninsula.

During the last 4 days of the month the weather was mainly settled under the influence of an anticyclone moving across the North Island and to the east.
