

temperatures. On the 15th a small secondary depression formed off the coast of Otago with heavy rain there, resulting in flooding. In the easterlies the weather cleared on the West Coast. During the next 2 days the main depression crossed the North Island with further rain there, while the weather improved slowly over most of the South Island. With the depression to the east on the 18th, rain persisted over the North Island besides Nelson and Marlborough.

From the 19th to the 21st pressures remained low over the North Island and to the east, while a ridge of high pressure passed over Campbell Island. In the cool south-easterlies rain persisted over the North Island and Marlborough, while a few showers were also reported on the Canterbury coast. On the following day a small depression moved southward along the west coast of both islands and trough of low pressure crossed the country. Rain still covered the whole of the North Island and now also western and northern districts of the South Island.

During the 23rd and 24th pressures were low to the south and a depression with its associated trough of low pressure crossed the south Tasman Sea and moved on to Southland. Rain was reported west of the ranges in both islands. On the next day a depression over the north Tasman Sea moved towards New Zealand, deepening rapidly, and it crossed the country north of Cook Strait on the 26th. In the North Island the weather was wet with strong gales in most districts, while rain also covered the greater part of the South Island.

For the last 4 days of the month pressures were high over and to the north of Northland, while a series of deep depressions passed far to the south and the associated troughs of low pressure crossed New Zealand. In the westerlies rain was reported on the West Coast and on the Southland coast, and light falls also affected some western districts of the North Island on the 27th and 28th.
