

and there were indications that in nearly all of this area except the West Coast and parts of Northland the month was the warmest June recorded since temperature observations first began in the 1860s. The average departure over the North Island was 2.5°C (4.6°F) and over the South Island 1.8°C (3.2°F). Over the whole country it was 2.1°C (3.8°F). This was the 13th successive month with temperatures above normal in the North Island and the northern half of the South Island, and the 9th successive month in the southern half of the South Island.

Sunshine—Sunshine was mainly below normal by up to 40 hours. An area from Bay of Plenty through Waikato and Waitomo to North Taranaki was worst affected. In Otago and Southland and about Cook Strait sunshine was close to normal, except around Invercargill, where it was 30 hours above normal.

Weather Sequence—On the first 2 days of June a depression was centred west of the North Island and another one south-east of the South Island, and these two were connected by a trough of low pressure, while an anticyclone was centred to the south-east. Rain was fairly general but clearing soon in Southland and Otago. By the 3rd the anticyclone was centred south of the Chatham Islands with the main depression stationary over the eastern Tasman Sea. The anticyclone moved north-eastward, while the depression developed a second centre and moved southward. From this date until the 7th the weather was very unsettled in the north-easterlies. Some considerable rainfalls were recorded, with flooding in Bay of Plenty and later, Otago. On the 8th and 9th the complex depression covered New Zealand but was losing intensity, and the weather gradually improved, with only scattered falls on the latter day.

On the 10th and 11th a complex depression covering the south Tasman Sea and the area to the south of the South Island moved south-eastward, while the associated trough of low pressure crossed the country with westerly winds behind it, causing rain in western and northern districts of both islands. During the next 2 days a small depression crossed northern districts of the South Island, with another associated trough. Rain was reported mainly in western areas from Auckland to Hokitika and also in eastern districts of the South Island besides Wairarapa. A depression formed on this trough near North Cape on the 14th and travelled south-eastwards while yet another trough moved on to the South Island. Rain now affected mainly northern districts of the North Island and Gisborne besides the West Coast and Southland. On the following day yet another trough of low pressure caused rain to persist on the West Coast and in Southland, while some was also reported in Taranaki.

On the 16th a large anticyclone centred over New South Wales extended on to the Tasman Sea and New Zealand; however, there were still a few scattered showers. As the anticyclone moved eastward during the next 2 days the weather was mainly fine. However, on the 19th and 20th the weather in Northland and Gisborne was marred by rain in easterlies as a depression passed to the north of the country.

On the 21st and 22nd a small depression crossed the South Island with an associated trough, causing rain in Northland and also in western districts as far south as Hokitika. During the next 2 days a somewhat similar depression crossed the North Island, with rain there except in southern districts; and some rain also in Fiordland, Southland, and Otago. The period from the 25th to the 27th was one of westerlies, with pressures high to the north and low to the south. Rain was fairly general except in eastern districts.

During the last 3 days of the month a small depression formed over the northern half of the South Island and moved slowly eastward while an anticyclone was centred to the east of Campbell Island. In the easterlies, Canterbury and Otago reported misty conditions with considerable rain. Rain was also reported in western districts of the North Island and about Cook Strait.
