

the south-west of Noumea, which moved slowly towards Southland. The trough itself also eventually moved southward. Rain extended to many other districts on the 4th and 9th, and to the whole country on the 10th. Flooding was reported in Bay of Plenty, Northland, and Coromandel.

The period from the 11th to the 23rd was one of westerlies. From the 11th to the 14th pressures were high to the north. The depression over Southland deepened and moved southward. Later a second very deep depression moved towards Campbell Island. Rain affected mainly the West Coast and the Alps but extended at times to Southland and Central Otago with some light falls further to the east. Gales were reported on the 11th. Conditions deteriorated over northern districts of the North Island with rain there on the 15th and 16th as a depression passed to the north, while the westerlies still persisted in the south. From the 17th to the 23rd an anticyclone crossed the North Island while a series of deep depressions continued to pass far to the south. The distribution of rainfall was similar to that of the 11th to 14th, but there was only a little light rain in parts of the West Coast on the 19th and 20th. Gales were reported on the 17th in Manawatu and Wellington, and on the West Coast.

From the 24th to the 29th the anticyclone was centred to the east while a depression was almost stationary over the South Tasman Sea, finally crossing Southland. During this time there was some rain over all of the South Island, with light falls extending at times to Wellington, Manawatu, and Taranaki. On the 30th a small depression and its associated trough brought rain to northern districts of the North Island. On the last day of the month a ridge of high pressure extended over the country and the weather was mainly fine.
