

east coast from Timaru to East Cape and about Cook Strait. On the following day the anticyclone covered the whole country and the weather was fair but cold. With the development of a depression over the North Tasman Sea some light rain was reported in northern districts on the 7th and 8th.

The depression moved southward and deepened. From the 9th to the 11th it moved slowly eastward to a position off the Buller coast, while a trough of low pressure crossed New Zealand and another small centre developed to the east. This was the wettest part of the month, with general rain, except in the south-west of the South Island. Some considerable falls were reported in northern and western districts of both Islands. As the depression lost intensity on the following day the rain became lighter, but still covered three-quarters of the country.

During the 13th and 14th depressions passed far to the south with troughs of low pressure crossing New Zealand. Conditions were westerly with fairly general rain, which was however very light in the east. From the 15th to the 17th a deep depression over the Tasman Sea crossed the country just south of Cook Strait. Rain spread over the country, mainly from the north, and became general, while temperatures were colder. As the depression moved away on the following day rain persisted on the West Coast and the Southland coast with scattered light falls in other western districts, and in Otago and Southland.

On the 19th, a ridge of high pressure covered the country and the weather was fair apart from some rain in South Westland and Fiordland. From the 20th to the 22nd a deep depression near Tasmania moved south-eastward towards Macquarie Island, while a trough of low pressure crossed New Zealand. Rain was reported, except in eastern districts from Canterbury to Gisborne. For the next two days a small depression which developed near Auckland moved eastward. At first, light rain was fairly general but on the 24th, in the south-easterlies, it was restricted mainly to Cook Strait, eastern districts from Cape Palliser to East Cape, Auckland, and Northland. From the 25th to the 27th an anticyclone was centered over the Tasman Sea and another developed east of the South Island, while the depression remained to the north-east of the North Island. The weather was settled apart from light rain at times in Northland, Gisborne and Hawke's Bay, and also South Westland, Southland, and Fiordland. Temperatures became colder.

During the last four days of the month an anticyclone remained centered near the Chatham Islands, while another anticyclone was centered south-east of Tasmania, and a depression near Norfolk Island moved eastward. At first winds were mainly easterly with rain in many eastern districts from Canterbury northward, but later they were cold south-westerlies with only scattered light rain in some eastern and southern areas.
