

Bay of Plenty, Gisborne, and the central plateau of the North Island. At first the northern half of the South Island was also affected. Temperatures became warm in the North Island. During the next 2 days a depression passed far to the south-west, with the associated trough crossing the South Island. Showers were reported still in parts of the North Island and in coastal districts of the South Island. On the 19th and 20th another similar trough brought considerable rain to the West Coast, with light falls in most other parts of the South Island. Temperatures became warm, especially in the east.

The period from the 21st to the 29th was very dry. From the 21st to the 24th an extensive belt of high pressure covered New Zealand and extended over the South Tasman Sea and also eastward to the Chatham Islands, while a depression was nearly stationary off the northern coast of New South Wales. The weather was mainly fine and sunny but a few showers were reported, especially in the Gisborne district and around Auckland. During the next 5 days the main centre of the anticyclone lay initially to the south-west of New Zealand with a ridge extending over the country, and the whole system moved slowly eastward. Isolated showers were reported, especially over the central plateau of the North Island, but also at times in Northland and on the West Coast.

On the last 2 days of the month the main centre of high pressure lay far to the south-east of the Chatham Islands, while a small depression passed close to Southland and another one was near North Cape. Rain affected most of the North Island, besides the West Coast, Southland, and parts of Otago.
